Hi Victor,

I agree it's unpaid leave.

This is because he can't get medical clearance to perform the inherent requirements of the role safely.

Regards.

David,

Attached is the medical certificate for the above employee.

This is the employee I sent home to see his doctor because he is undertaking chemotherapy treatment, I found out that has been happening for the past 18 months.

The doctors have advised him to stay away from potential human contact for a minimum of 30 days. He is physically not sick and can perform prescribed duties however it is in his best health interests not to attend work.

He is happy to take this period of absence as unpaid leave, this was his suggestion.

Please advise how this case is to be handled

Regards

Victor
